PROTESTANT missionaries plan to leave Mexico before July 21, when new religious laws go into effect. They say their consciences will not permit them to remain.

ALL CHURCH property is to be confiscated, on the grounds that such property has been held by the churches unlawfully for the last fifty years.

No religious instruction will be permitted in schools, and religious publications may not mention or comment on news of national political affairs.

THE LAW is evidently aimed especially at the Catholic church, the national church of Mexico.

A statement issued by the Mexican government says: "Restrictions apply to all religions, but the Catholic church is most affected because it is the predominant religion in the country."

WALSH, IN COLLAPSE, DENIES OWN GUILT

"You've got the wrong man in this case!" With these words, Dr. Thomas E. Walsh, locked up in a detention room at the city prison, while his wife hurried to get $15,000 bail for him, boldly denied his guilt today in his first statement since his arrest for the illegal surgery that preceded the death and dismemberment of Edith Louise Greene.

Although the confident denial, made to Superintendent of Police Crowley, a former close personal friend, came from the lips of a man plainly suffering from tremendous mental strain, it nevertheless had the effect of spurring on the efforts of the authorities to apprehend the second doctor suspected in the case.

A short time earlier, weakened by the weight of a thousand burdensome memories, Dr. Walsh buckled under the strain of waiting for bondsmen and collapsed in his chair.

Crowley Expresses Sorrow at Predicament of Walsh

Superintendent Crowley went to the detention pen to escort James Walsh, nephew of the accused doctor, who was given permission by District Attorney O'Brien to visit his uncle.

Learning against the bars of the detention room, Superintendent Crowley, because of an acquaintance with Dr. Walsh dating back to days when Walsh was an accredited physician, said:

In the room pictured here, and at this table, Edith Green wrote daily letters of love to Ford, held in connection with her death. Photographs are made exactly where the incidents they depict transpired.

'Eddie Had Beautiful Dreams About Jim, Jr.,' Says Chum

“My both big and little Jimmie’s are fine, so far.”
Last February Edith Louise Greene, youthful victim in the Mattapan box atrocity, wrote with joy of approaching motherhood to Ethel Phipps of Lynn, a friend.
Three days before she died, she boasted the same claim to Elizabeth Landry, perhaps the most intimate friend of the dead girl.

"WEEPING, EDIE TOLD ME," SAID JIMMIE FORD

It was at this table that Edie told the secret which led to the operation Dr. Thomas E. Walsh is alleged to have performed, and which resulted in her tragic death. Daily the Boston Evening American will publish pictures showing the history of the State ward whose body was hacked to pieces, placed in boxes and tossed near New Calvary Cemetery to hide the crime against her. The next chapter in the series will appear Monday.

With the arrest of Dr. Thomas E. Walsh, his wife and three South Boston youths, making five persons in all taken into custody in the death of pretty Edith Greene, the authorities only redoubled their efforts to apprehend the second Boston "physician" whose surgery-skilled hand is believed to have helped dismember the body.

When the arrested "physician" collapsed in the "pen," gasping for breath, alarmed guards hastened to give aid, while Sergeant Dennis Case, authorized by Warden A. Dunn, summoned a surgeon. After treatment, Walsh resumed his silent wait on the bench while, through the long, tedious hours, he lay only dead.

He was permitted to eat bread, butter and milk kitchen and, according to his wife, he even managed to bite his watch, his life nevertheless, but with extreme nervousness. Procurement of bail was expected immediately. Both his wife and mother will be arraigned Monday at the Superior Court, his wife as an alibi.

Probably the arresting officer in the case of Dr. Walsh, and he explained that the trouble with the property offered as surety for Walsh is that it was found to be covered with an encumbrance of $10,000. Walsh must get two bondsmen, of whom two are required.

HUNT SECOND SUSPECT.

Meanwhile, police and private detectives sought for two persons—a second doctor, revealed by the Boston Evening American to have played a probably prominent part in the crime, and a chauffeur who was supposed to have driven the car that took the hacked corpse to Cambridge.

Atty. Gen. P. Feeney, retained as counsel, appeared at the office of District Attorney Thomas C. O'Brien with the couple and surrendered them to the authorities who have been conducting a state-wide search for three days.

Following a conference of nearly an hour, the couple were led across the street to police headquarters by Special Officer George McCaffery and booked. Dr. Walsh was taken to the hospital where his wife with a blood accessory to this crime.

South Bpton youths, making a mockery of the police, were present in the death of pretty young woman. They had been told that the youths would be "physician" whose surgery skill helped dismember the body.

Private detectives in the employment of the district attorney, John J. Walsh, from East Dedham strain, police division, inspectors from the headquarters, all released from the scene of the crime. The shipper, John J. Walsh, were transferred to the second floor and as soon as his arrest was effected.

LANDLADY IN CONFERENCE.
Assuming a position of new importance in the investigation, Mrs. Amy MacDonald of Bantley street, Dorchester, was in conference today for an hour with Police Captain Driscoll and District Attorney O'Brien at the latter's office. Editor Greene stayed at Mrs. MacDonald's house for several days prior to the fatal operation and was advised of the Dorchester woman to get married.

Arrest of the chauffeur appeared likely within a few hours, although the police were admittedly hazy as to his identity. A wealth of clues aided them in tracing him.

Hunt for the second suspected physician was spread out into three states.

Mrs. Walsh, who surrendered with her husband to District Attorney Thomas C. O'Brien, was released on $2,000 bail which she produced after being booked at police headquarters.

The dramatic climax to the search

Emma J. Walsh of East Boston failed to qualify on the doctor's bond, and when Mrs. Walsh left headquarters she joined friends and began a frantic search for bail to bring about her husband's release.

Dr. Walsh was taken to the City Tombs to await the arrival of bondsmen and Joseph Fahey, bail commissioner, remained at hand to allow for the man's immediate release when bonds arrived.

The delay in the surrender of the couple was due, according to the statement of Attorney Feeney, to

"When I worked with Edie at the Robert Brigham Hospital," said Ethel Phipps, "she was to be pitied. She worked hard all week and while other girls experienced the joy of receiving their week's salary, Edie's was collected by the State. A few days later she received a dollar or married, and every word she uttered was an added phrase to the saving she already had done about her Jimmie. He was wonderful and marvelous and handsome, she said, and he was to be her husband, and the father of a little Jimmie. At first I disbelieved her for she was so glad about her condition, so happy, that I just couldn't think her serious."

The dead girl wrote the following letter to Miss Phipps while she was in New Hampshire:

Swampscott, Mass.

Fear that his arrest would be difficult was expressed by the police, but with every hour's delay the belief that the trackers were weaving about him became stronger through additional information gathered from telephone operators and bellboys at the South End hotel where he stayed under an assumed name.

Whether he left the train at Worcester or some other intervening stop is not yet determined but he has not shown up at his recent New York haunts. Nor has he been in the vicinity of former activities in his State when he first came into trouble with the police.

'SEX STUFF' ON STAGE IS DEAD, SAYS MANNERS

New York, July 17 (U.S.A.)—"Sex stuff" which has littered the Broadway stage for these past many seasons, will soon be as dead as the dinosaurs, says J. Hartley Manners, playwright and producer, who expressed himself on his arrival here today from a sojourn in Europe.

"Now is the time for a good, wholesome, serious, finished play to get in an audience," he said. "The man who can write a clean play that any grandmother could see without blushing is going to be the playwright of the hour."

The thoughtful critic is not up to date in his opinion. It is time for a heroine who is a good girl and a hero who is an outstanding citizen. Old-fashioned standards will be the coming standard.
